

Bio of Dr. David Wiley

David A. Wiley, Ed.D., holds a BS, MEd and Ed.D. from Temple University, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Following 15 years of teaching science, he entered higher education and earned the rank of full professor at three institutions. He began his higher education career as an assistant professor at the University of Scranton, Scranton, Pennsylvania where he eventually earned the rank of associate professor with tenure. He earned the rank of full professor at the Jesuit University under the demanding requirements of that institution. Dr. Wiley served as chair of the Education Department at University of Scranton for close to ten years; as the inaugural Dean of the College of Education and Human Services at Lenoir-Rhyne University for three years, and he is now in his third year as Associate Dean of the Reich College of Education at Appalachian State University. His duties at Appalachian State include teacher education program recruiting, advisement and retention, curriculum development, course scheduling, RCOE scholarships, honors day ceremonies, commencement, assessment and accreditation processes and reporting, as well as mandatory reporting to Appalachian State, UNC General Administration, North Carolina DPI, the U.S. Department of Education, and various professional associations.

Dr. Wiley brings with him experience as an NCATE coordinator and has been an active participant at state and national meetings as well as serving as primary contact for mandated state, national and organizational reporting. He is active in several organizations and has served as a reviewer for proposals for the AACTE meeting.

Dr. Wiley has assisted with the writing of the SACS reports at both Lenoir-Rhyne University where he worked with a team on the Policy section, and at Appalachian State where he worked on the assessment team.
