

The New VoiceThread

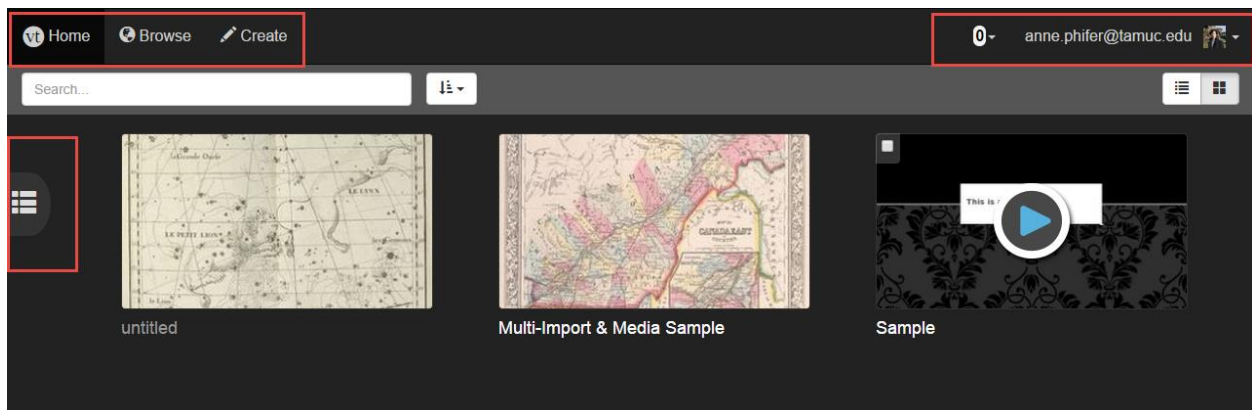

VoiceThread has a New Look

The easy-to-use presentation software has a new, more intuitive look and feel after the most recent update, but it's still the same VoiceThread. While things look a bit different, for the most part they operate in the same fashion.

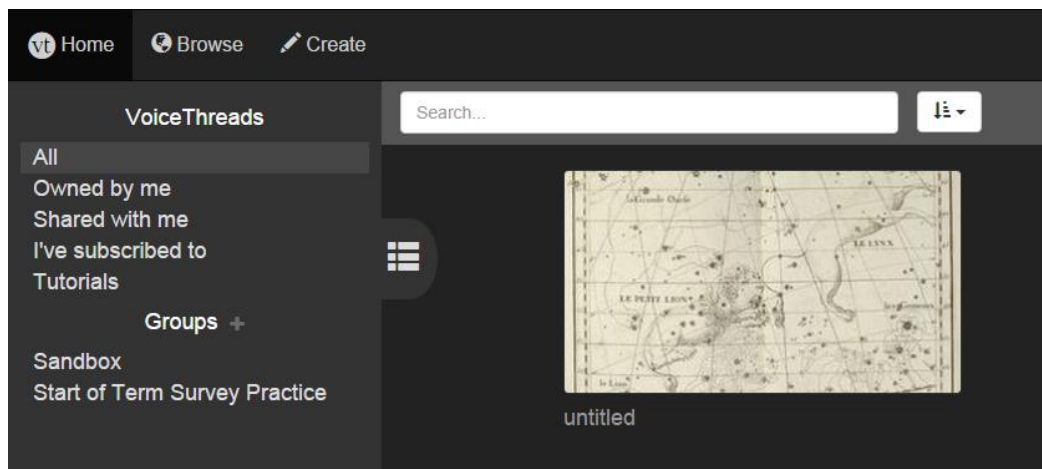

The old VoiceThread looked like this when you opened the MyVoice tab from the eCollege Course Item:

VoiceThread's landing page now looks like this:

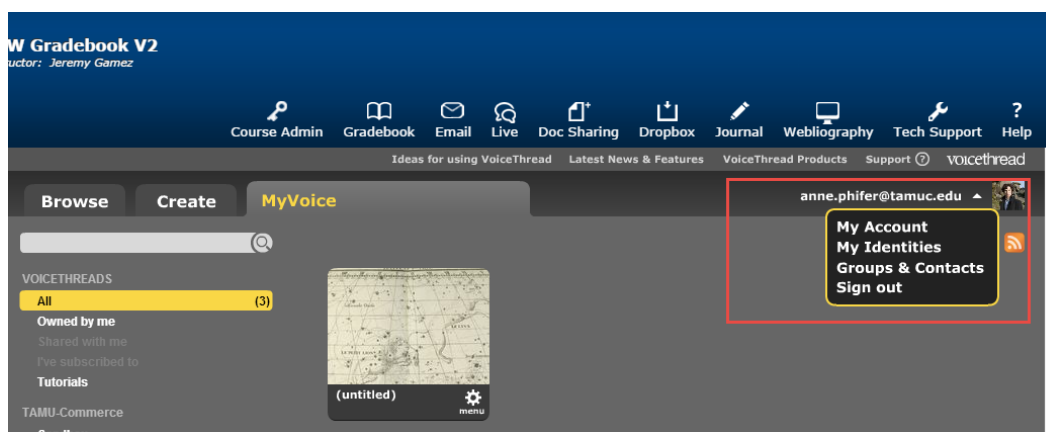

As you can see, the “MyVoice” tab has been replaced, and the side menu is now hidden. When you hover over the sidebar item with three lines, you gain access to the side menu.

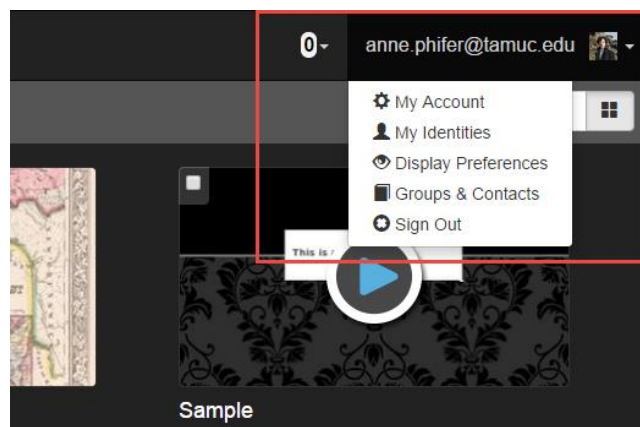

The Account drop down is essentially the same from the old look to the new look:

New display preferences make it easier to view VoiceThread in a way that is comfortable for the individual working with the software.

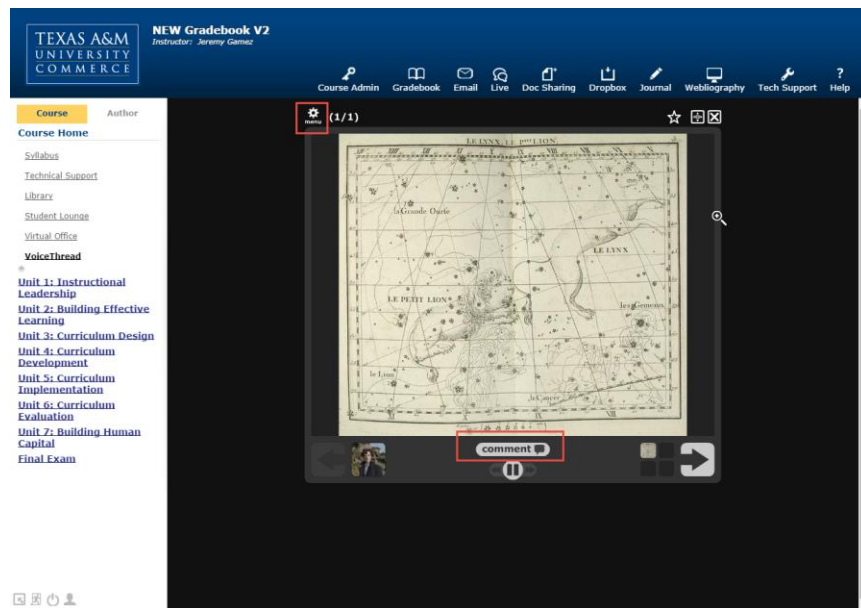

In the old style, VoiceThread creation was done in the Create tab by uploading, and then adding new bits of media after the fact, if necessary.

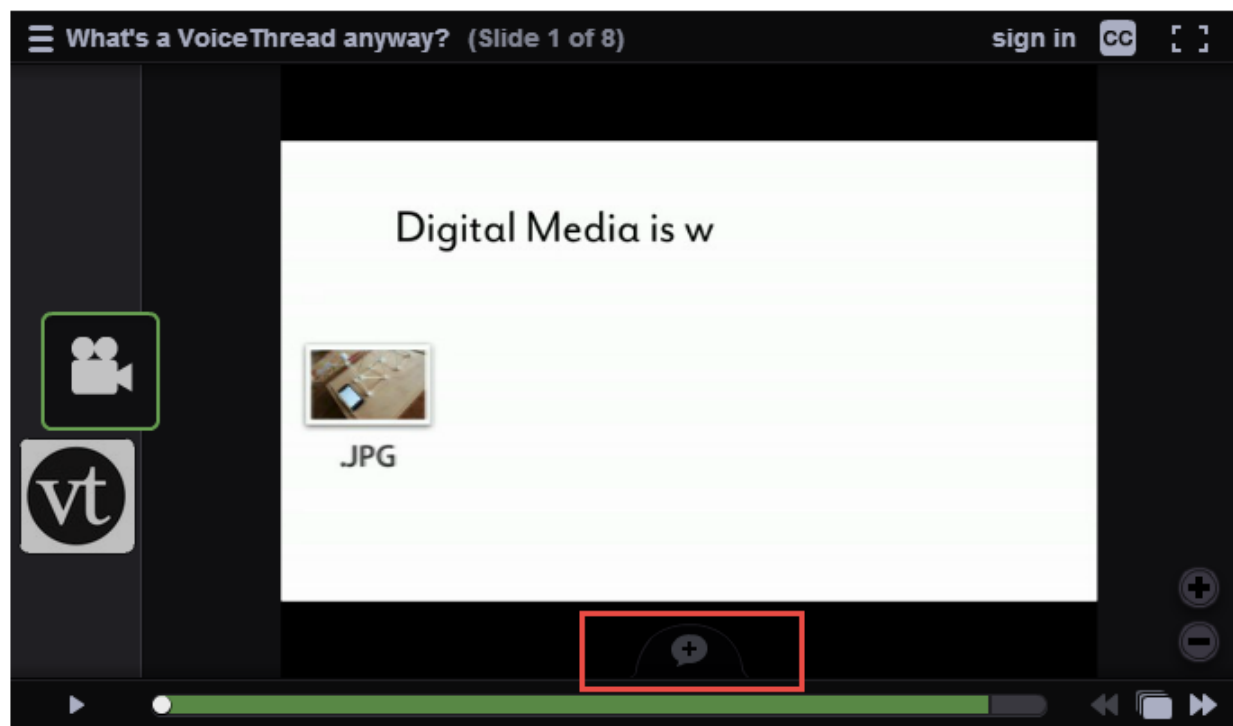

The new VoiceThread has a simple area where you can either choose files in the same way you did before, or drag and drop a collection of files all at the same time.

The comment functions are all the same from the old look to the new look. Users are still capable of making comments by text, microphone, telephone, or webcam. The only change is the comment button itself.

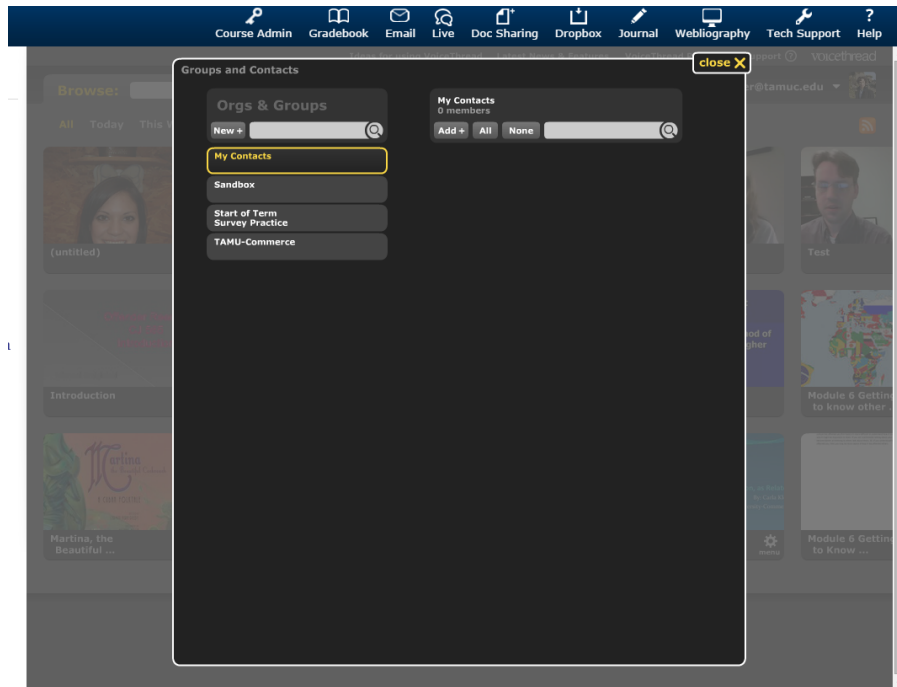

Instead of a button that says "Comment," VoiceThread now employs a simple word bubble icon.

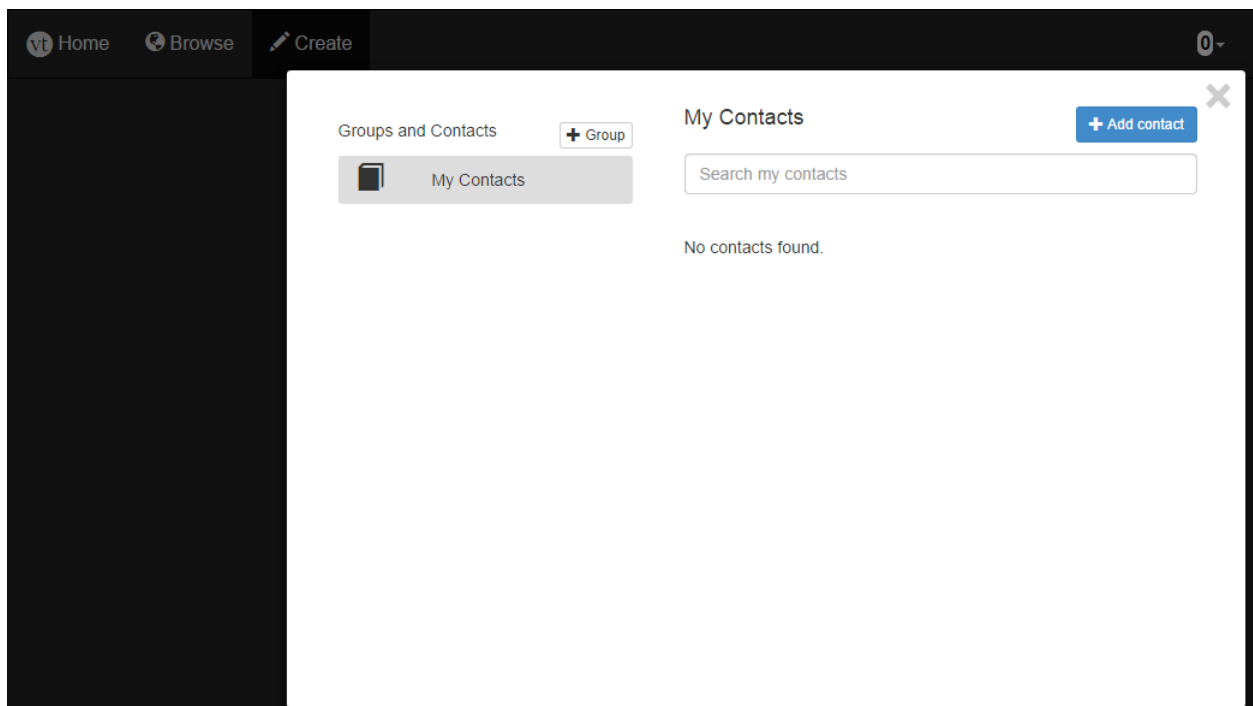

As always, clicking the comment button will open up a menu that shows users the variety of ways they can make comments on a VoiceThread.

Group set up works the same way in both versions of VoiceThread as well.

The new look is set up the exact same way, but has a cleaner looking interface.

The new VoiceThread operates almost exactly like the old VoiceThread did. It's still the same great presentation software, but with more options and an updated look.
